

New Era Roofs

Pivot Points Playbook — Objection Scenarios, Adapted to the 12-Step Process

Steps 10–12 · KPIs 16, 17, 20, 21, 22 · Internal Training Use Only

What this is. The Top Rep Pivot Points cards drill the right scenarios. This playbook translates twenty of them into New Era language — mirror-first, no-oriented, full price only, T.O. chain intact. Part I covers close-time objections, Part II covers pre-close situations (Steps 1–3), Part III covers money objections and buying-signal reads, Part IV covers third-party influencers and the value gap. Anything the 12-Step Sales Process document already owns — the Price & Value Guarantee script, the Triangle definition, the T.O. chain — is referenced here, not restated. One source of truth per script. Where card language conflicts with our methodology, it has been rewritten and the change is flagged. Reps drill from this document, not from the cards.

The rule that governs every play: Objection lands → FM DJ voice → mirror + 4-second silence → acknowledge → question only if the mirror stalls → get to PRICE → re-close → T.O. chain. Nothing in this playbook overrides that flow. These plays are what you run inside the flow once the objection category is identified.

The 4 C's — Mapped to Our Flow

The cards teach four moves on every objection: Concede, Commit, Convince, Close — with Concede as the most important. That maps cleanly onto what we already run:

- Concede = tactical empathy. The mirror, the label, the acknowledge. You put yourself on the customer's side before you do anything else. This is why the mirror goes first — conceding without information is just agreeing.
- Commit = isolation. Get them to commit that this one thing is the only thing. This is the Final Bridge logic re-run at the close: "If we got that handled, is there anything else?"
- Convince = reassure/overcome. Tie downs, cinch the knot, the Triangle, Cost vs. Value, the Price & Value Guarantee.
- Close = re-close and T.O. chain. Every path ends here.

COACHING FLAG

Concede is where reps fail. If your voice rises or you start arguing before you've mirrored and acknowledged, the other three C's never happen. The gear-down is the concede.

Scenario 1 — "We need to think about it"

KPI 20 · STEP 10 · THIS IS A STALL, NOT AN OBJECTION. WORK IT SLOWLY.

What it is. "Think about it" is a category, not a reason. Your job is to find out which of three things is actually underneath: value, affordability, or timing. Never argue with the stall itself.

THE FLOW

"Think about it?" [4-second silence — let them fill it.]

"I see how you'd want to think about a decision this size."

“Can I ask — how long do you feel you’d need?”

If they name a short window and mean it, take it seriously — a serious answer here is a buying signal, not a brush-off. Then isolate:

“It sounded like the [package they chose] was the one — is that the roof, and are we the company you’d trust to install it right the first time?”

“Then when that time comes, the only thing between us would be the investment — or is there something else I missed?”

Once they commit that it’s the money, diagnose it out loud:

“Usually when it comes down to the money, it’s one of three things. It’s value — you don’t see paying what we’re asking. It’s affordability — you’re not sure where the money comes from. Or it’s timing — you’re waiting on something. Which one is it for you?”

- Value → revisit Cost vs. Value, cinch the knot on their discovery answers, run the Triangle.
- Affordability → GoodLeap. They’re already pre-qualified — show the monthly again.
- Timing → go to Scenario 5.

COACHING FLAG

The card version asks “is that correct?” after the money isolation. That’s a yes-trap tie-down. Ours ends with “or is there something else I missed?” — a no-oriented door. Same commitment, no pressure read.

Scenario 2 — “We need three estimates”

KPI 22 · STEP 10 · THE SHOP-AROUND OBJECTION WITH A NUMBER ATTACHED.

What it is. Two to three bids is normal buyer behavior — don’t treat it as rejection. The play is to surface their decision criteria, get conditional commitment against that criteria, and make the Price & Value Guarantee do the heavy lifting. Remember: the guarantee lets them shop us until install day anyway. That’s our unfair advantage in this exact moment.

PART 1 — SURFACE THE CRITERIA

“Three estimates?” [4-second silence.]

“Absolutely understand. Other than wanting those bids, is there anything about New Era that would stop you from feeling comfortable choosing us?”

“So when those bids are side by side on this table — what are you going to use to make the final call?” [Let them answer. Do not feed them the word “value.” If they say price, run the Triangle. If they say value, continue.]

“So if our value holds up against anything you find, is there any reason you couldn’t see yourself being a New Era customer?”

PART 2 — THEY’VE ALREADY CHOSEN

If the conversation shows they already prefer us, name it — respectfully:

"Can I be straight with you? Someone will always quote this cheaper. I haven't met anyone who can do it cheaper and still do it the way we walked through today. And that's exactly why the Price & Value Guarantee exists — you keep shopping us until install day, in writing."

"So if you already feel we're the right company — what would you be looking for in another company that you haven't already found in us?" [Silence. Let them answer "nothing" themselves.]

"Then is there any reason we shouldn't take this off your plate today — knowing the guarantee protects you either way?"

COACHING FLAG

The card closes Part 2 with "wouldn't you agree it's just easier to get this done now?" That's an assumptive yes-push and it reads as pressure. Ours converts it to a no-oriented close backed by the guarantee — the guarantee is the reason it's safe to say yes today, so use it as the reason. If they hold the wall after this, do not keep pushing. Go to Scenario 3 — the parachute.

Scenario 3 — The Stone Wall

KPI 22 · STEP 10 → 12 · THEY WILL NOT BUY WHILE YOU'RE IN THE HOUSE. TWO VERSIONS.

Version 1 — the quiet wall. They're polite, engaged, and immovable: no business tonight, they're seeing more contractors. This is where the parachute play lives. You're no longer closing tonight — you're closing the review appointment and securing equal footing.

THE PARACHUTE

"It looks like there's no way I can earn your business while I'm here — I totally understand."

"Can I ask you for one thing? Would you be against giving me the same respect you're giving the others — and not signing with anyone the night they're out, either?"

"When's the last estimate scheduled? I'd like to set our review visit for right after — that way you're comparing everything side by side with all the numbers in front of you. And honestly, if one of those bids is better than ours, I want to be the first to tell you."

Version 2 — the announced pact. They declared up front: "we're not buying from anyone today." The cards are right — you must call this out, respectfully, or it kills the appointment silently. But call it out with an accusation audit, not a trap.

CALLING OUT THE PACT

"[Names], you mentioned at the start you had no intention of moving forward with anyone today — and I respect that. You're probably worried I'm going to spend the next ten minutes trying to talk you out of it."

"I'm not. I just want to understand the decision you're actually making. If this came in at some number that made it obvious — say a fraction of what you expected — would tonight still be off the table?" [They'll concede they'd consider it.]

"So it's not really the timing — it sounds like there's a number in your mind. Would you be against telling me what it is?"

Now you're at PRICE, which is where every path ends. Re-close, then T.O. chain. Rep quotes full price only — if there's relief, it comes from the manager call.

COACHING FLAG

The exit-sell line (“if one of those bids is better than ours, I want to be the first to tell you”) belongs in the parachute pitch only. It is a fallback positioning move, not a close-on-the-spot play. Do not use it earlier in the appointment — it invites shopping before the wall exists.

The $500 hypothetical on the card works, but keep it clearly hypothetical and light. The point is the concession that a number exists — not to embarrass them into admitting it.

Scenario 4 — “We never sign the same day / we want to sleep on it”

KPI 20 · STEP 10 · A POLICY STALL. RESPECT IT, THEN CREATE SPACE FOR THEM TO DECIDE.

What it is. Different from the stone wall — this is a household rule, and arguing with a rule attacks their identity. The cards suggest the Porchlight Close: step out, give the decision-makers room, come back. That fits us — with one adjustment.

THE PLAY

“Never the same day?” [4-second silence.]

“That’s fair — a rule like that has probably saved you from a bad contractor before.” [Accusation audit / label. Let them tell the story if they have one — it builds trust.]

“Tell you what — I need to grab a few more pictures of the roofline for the file anyway. Let me step out and do that. Take the time while I’m out there, talk it over, and whatever you land on, I can take a no just as graciously as a yes.”

That last line is the Safe Space close from Step 3, cinched. You planted it at the Upfront Contract — this is where it pays off. When you come back in:

“Where did you two land?” [Silence.]

If it’s still a no for tonight, do not leave without a clear and definite next step — set the review appointment before you walk out. SAMFAM: a follow-up secured in the home beats any outreach after it.

COACHING FLAG

Only use the picture-taking exit if you genuinely take pictures. Manufactured busywork is manufactured urgency’s cousin — if it’s fake, it corrodes the trust position everything else stands on.

Scenario 5 — “We have a bonus / tax return coming”

KPI 16 · STEP 10 · A TIMING OBJECTION WEARING A MONEY COSTUME.

What it is. They’re not saying no — they’re saying “not until the money lands.” This has nothing to do with price. Confirm the conditional commitment first, then bridge the gap with GoodLeap.

THE FLOW

“A bonus coming?” [4 seconds.] “When are you expecting it?”

“So if we were sitting here at the end of [month] with that money in hand — would we be doing business?” [Get the commitment. If no, it was never timing — loop back to the Scenario 1 diagnosis.]

“Then let me ask — if I could get the roof on the schedule now, and you didn’t need to put anything toward it until that money arrives, would you be against hearing how that works?”

“We already ran your GoodLeap pre-qualification. The promotional structure gives you the runway — the bonus lands, you apply it, and the roof’s already protecting the house instead of waiting on the calendar.”

This is the honest urgency engine — the cost of waiting is real: another season of exposure, and prices that have moved 64% in seven years are not moving down. State the fact. Do not dress it up.

COACHING FLAG

Do not promise specific financing terms (“12 months same as cash”) unless that exact promotional structure is currently live in GoodLeap. Quote what the pre-qual actually shows. A financing promise the paperwork can’t match is a cancel waiting to happen.

Scenario 6 — “Your price is too much”

KPI 16 · STEP 10 · NEVER HANDLE THIS OBJECTION BEFORE YOU KNOW WHAT IT MEANS.

What it is. The most common rep failure on this objection is answering it. “Too much” can mean value, affordability, timing, or a competitor’s number sitting in a drawer. The card’s instinct is right: clarify first. Our tool for that is the mirror and the calibrated question.

THE FLOW

“Too much?” [4-second silence — this alone resolves half of these.]

“How do you mean?” [FM DJ. Then silence again. Whoever talks first loses.]

Their answer sorts the play:

- “It’s more than we expected” → value. Cost vs. Value, cinch the discovery answers, Triangle.
- “We can’t swing that right now” → affordability. Monthly via GoodLeap.
- “We’re waiting on money” → timing. Scenario 5.
- “Another company was cheaper” → comparison. Triangle plus Price & Value Guarantee — apples to apples, in writing, refund the difference plus $100.

Every branch lands back at PRICE → re-close → T.O. chain. Full price is the only price a rep quotes.

Part II — Pre-Close Situations

These three land in Steps 1–3, not at the close. Handle them wrong early and there is no close to handle.

Scenario 7 — The For Sale Sign in the Yard

STEP 2 · KPIS 3–4 · NAME THE ELEPHANT DURING WARM-UP, NOT AT PRICING.

What it is. A For Sale sign changes the buyer's math — they're not buying peace of mind for themselves, they're protecting a transaction. If you run the standard peace-of-mind track without acknowledging it, everything after Step 2 lands flat. Name it in the warm-up.

THE FLOW

"I noticed the For Sale sign out front — congratulations. So what's the goal for our visit today: getting the house ready to list, or something a buyer's inspection turned up?"

Their answer rewrites your Step 8 summary trigger. The honest economics, in plain language:

"Here's what we see with homes on the market: when a buyer's inspector flags the roof, one of two things happens. Some buyers walk — they assume if the roof was let go, other things were too. The rest negotiate, and they don't negotiate at cost — they pad the number because they don't know what they're walking into. Either way, the roof gets paid for. The only question is whether you control the price and the contractor, or the buyer does."

COACHING FLAG

The card cites a "National Board of Realtors" study and a 10% figure. That body doesn't exist under that name, and the stat is unverified. Same bucket as the IKO warranty claim: do not quote it until verified with a real source. The version above carries the full logic without a citation that can be fact-checked on their phone at the kitchen table.

Scenario 8 — "We're not buying anything today" (at the door)

STEP 3 · KPI 7 · THE ENTRY-LEVEL PACT. DIFFERENT ANIMAL FROM THE CLOSE-TIME STONE WALL.

What it is. They announce the pact before you've sat down. They're defensive because they expect a salesperson to spend three hours pressuring them. Your job is to lower the guard — honestly.

What we will not run: the card's counter is "didn't the office tell you I'm only here to give information?" That line is false in our model. Our CSR script promises an inspection and exact pricing on the first visit — the homeowner was told, twice. Claiming you're just an information guy contradicts what our own office said and detonates trust the moment you present numbers. It's manufactured, and manufactured anything is off the table.

The honest counter already exists in our process — the Upfront Contract with an accusation audit in front of it:

THE FLOW

"Not buying anything today?" [4-second silence.]

"That's completely fair — and you're probably braced for me to spend the next two hours trying to talk you out of that. I'm not going to."

Then run the Step 3 Upfront Contract verbatim — the full expectation statement, ending on the Safe Space close: “I can take a NO just as graciously as I can take a YES.” The pact exists because they’ve never met a contractor who gave them a real exit. Hand them one in the first ten minutes and the wall usually comes down on its own.

COACHING FLAG

The pact at the door is a trust deficit, not an objection. You don’t overcome it — you make it unnecessary. If it’s still standing at Step 10, that’s Scenario 3, and you’ll have earned the right to call it out because you predicted it here.

Scenario 9 — Not All Decision-Makers Home

STEP 1 · KPI 2 · A BOOKING FAILURE FIRST. A FALLBACK PLAY SECOND.

What it is. The CSR script confirms both homeowners twice before booking. If you arrive and one is missing, the process broke upstream — log it so the booking gets coached. Then run damage control: the one-legger protocol.

The rule: inspect fully, present no pricing. A price presented to half the decision unit becomes a number in a drawer — the absent spouse hears it secondhand, without the discovery, without the value build, and you’ve armed a shop-around against yourself. Whoever eventually sits with both homeowners wins the job. Make sure that’s you.

THE FLOW

“Will [spouse] be joining us today?” [No.] “No problem at all. Here’s what I can do while I’m here: I’ll ask you a few questions, walk the property with you, and run the full inspection — pictures and video, so I can bring the roof down to you instead of you coming up to me.”

“After the inspection I’ll walk you through everything I found. Then I’ll take the measurements back and work with the office to get your investment down to the penny — and I’d rather go through the numbers once, with both of you, than twice secondhand. When are you both home this week?”

Lock the return appointment before you leave — SAMFAM. Run the GoodLeap soft pull if the present homeowner is a co-owner and willing; it protects the return visit’s time the same way it protects the first.

COACHING FLAG

Do not let “I’ll just fill them in” pull you into presenting price. The answer is warm and firm: “You could — and half of what makes the numbers make sense is everything we walked through together. [Spouse] deserves the same walkthrough, not a summary.”

Part III — Money Objections & Reads

Step 9–11 territory. Every path here still ends at PRICE → re-close → T.O. chain. Full price is the only price a rep quotes — no exceptions in this section, because this is the section where reps break that rule.

Scenario 10 — Mum’s the Word (the look)

STEP 9 · KPI 15 · NOT AN OBJECTION. A BUYING SIGNAL. DO NOTHING.

What it is. You present price. One spouse looks at the other. Silence. That look means one party has approved and is checking for the other’s sign-off. The deal is closing itself in front of you — the only way to lose it is to talk.

The play: the Step 9 rule, executed literally. PRESENT PRICES. BE QUIET. The 4-second floor doesn’t apply here — the silence lasts as long as their conversation does. If the room needs more privacy than silence gives it, use the picture exit from Scenario 4: real pictures, real reason, real room to decide.

COACHING FLAG

Whoever talks first after the mirror loses — and this is the highest-stakes version of that rule. Reps who fill this silence with one more value point routinely talk couples out of a decision they had already made. Drill the discomfort, not the words.

Scenario 11 — “Your competitor is cheaper”

KPIS 22, 16 · STEP 10 · A BUYING SIGNAL WEARING A PRICE COSTUME.

What it is. If they wanted the cheaper bid, they’d have signed it. They’re telling you because they want to go with you — the lower number is leverage to pull your price down. Read it that way, and do not take the bait: the rep never discounts to match. Full price; relief lives in the T.O. chain only.

THE FLOW — LET THEM BUILD THE CASE

“Cheaper?” [4-second silence.] “That’s real — someone can always do it cheaper.”

“Let me ask you something. If both proposals were sitting on this table at the exact same price — who would you choose?” [If it’s us:] “Can I ask why?” [Silence. Let them talk.]

“What else?” [More silence. Every reason they name is a reason you no longer have to argue.]

Now the summary — their words, not yours, driving toward “that’s right”:

“So what I’m hearing is: [their reasons, verbatim]. That’s what the difference between these two numbers actually buys.” [Wait for “that’s right.”]

“Given everything you just told me — would you be comfortable giving those up to save the difference?”

Close with the Triangle if it stalls, and remind them of the Price & Value Guarantee: apples to apples, in writing, refund plus $100. The guarantee makes “cheaper” their homework, not your problem.

COACHING FLAG

The card ends with “don’t you see the extra $1,000?” — a yes-push that asks them to concede an argument. Ours ends no-oriented and makes the trade-off theirs to reject. Same destination, opposite pressure signature.

If they produce the bid in writing, read the scope line by line. Cheaper bids are usually smaller bids — different shingle class, capped decking, no ridge vent, 5-year workmanship. Name the deltas without trash-talking the competitor.

Scenario 12 — “I don’t want to pay anything down”

KPI 16 · STEP 10 · ALREADY SOLVED IN STEP 2. RECONNECT THEM TO IT.

What it is. This is affordability structure, not affordability. GoodLeap exists for exactly this, and the pre-qualification already ran in the first fifteen minutes.

THE FLOW

“Nothing down?” [4 seconds.] “Completely understand — a lot of our customers go the same way.”

“Remember the GoodLeap pre-qualification we ran at the start? That was for this moment. Based on what you qualified for, we can structure this with nothing out of pocket up front — would you be against looking at what your approval actually shows?”

COACHING FLAG

Quote only what the live GoodLeap approval shows. The card promises “pay in full at the end of the job” and “pay it off when it’s comfortable” — those are program-specific terms that may not exist in the current promotion. A financing promise the paperwork can’t match is a cancel with extra steps. Screen in hand, terms on screen, nothing from memory.

Scenario 13 — “We can’t afford that monthly payment”

KPIS 16, 17 · STEPS 10–11 · LET THEM NAME THE NUMBER. THEN THE MANAGER OWNS IT.

The setup rule: never lead with the best payment structure. Present the standard terms first. If the monthly lands heavy, that’s not a problem — it’s the opening that makes the manager call mean something.

THE FLOW

“The monthly’s the issue — not the roof, not us?” [Confirm the isolation.]

“Okay. So I’m not taking anything away from the rest of your life — what monthly would actually feel comfortable?” [Let them name it. Their number, not yours.]

“If that were the payment — would we be moving forward while I’m here?” [Get the commitment BEFORE any call.]

“Let’s take a crack at it and find out what it is.” [Call the manager. Every time. Domino/Jenga framing.]

This is Step 11 running exactly as written. The rep never says the lower payment is possible — the rep says it’s worth a call. If relief exists, it comes from the manager’s mouth, not yours.

Scenario 14 — “It’s out of our budget”

KPI 16 · STEP 10 · WHEN RELIEF CAN’T REACH THEIR NUMBER: RESCOPE, NEVER DISCOUNT.

What it is. The fallback when Scenario 13’s path can’t close the gap — the number they can afford is below what the T.O. chain can approve. The answer is not a deeper discount. The answer is the reason GBB exists.

THE FLOW

“If that’s where the budget genuinely is, I’m not going to pretend a phone call fixes it. What I can do is take another look at the scope — get you what the house needs now, at a number that’s honest for both of us.”

- Move the tier — Best to Better, Better to Good. Same crew, same installation standard; the difference is materials and coverage, and they heard that framing in Step 7.
- Or move the scope — what must happen now versus what can wait. The roof that’s failing gets done; the nice-to-haves get a date.

This protects the margin floor, keeps full-price integrity intact, and keeps the customer — a Good roof installed right beats a Best proposal in a drawer.

COACHING FLAG

The card’s companion line — “you work hard for your money, you deserve this, let’s get this done!” — is rejected. It’s flattery welded to a push, and it asks them to spend money as an act of self-worth. The “we budget investments differently than groceries” reframe is usable, but only as a genuine question: “When you set that budget, was it built for an investment that’s protecting the house for decades — or is it closer to a monthly-expenses number?” Their answer tells you whether you’re in Scenario 13 or 14.

Scenario 15 — “You’re being too pushy”

KPI 16 · ANY STEP · IF THEY SAY IT, IT’S TRUE. CONCEDE COMPLETELY, INSTANTLY.

What it is. The card is right about the diagnosis: if they tell you you’re pushy, you are. There is no version where they’re wrong and you argue them into feeling un-pushed. This is a full-concede moment — the C that makes the other three possible.

THE FLOW

“I’m sorry — that’s on me, and I appreciate you saying it instead of just shutting down.” [Full stop. No “but.” Let it land.]

“Here’s what’s underneath it, honestly: my fear is that if I don’t do my job well while I’m here, you end up going with a cut-rate job and paying for it for years. That’s on my mind — but the pace is yours to set, not mine.”

“So let me just ask straight: where do you actually stand right now?” [Silence. Take whatever comes back at face value.]

Then slow everything down. Return to their discovery answers, drop the close entirely for a few minutes, and let the Safe Space contract from Step 3 do its work.

COACHING FLAG

The card's closing line — "I tend to take that personally" — is cut. It flips the discomfort back onto the customer and asks them to manage your feelings mid-close. A concede that ends in a guilt trip is not a concede.

Track this one in call review. "Pushy" almost always means a specific earlier failure: a skipped mirror, a stacked close, silence that got filled. Find the timestamp where it started, not just where it surfaced.

Part IV — Outside Voices & The Value Gap

Three third-party plays and two final money plays. The third-party scenarios should almost never surprise you — the Discovery Form asks “Is there anyone else that you’re getting input from about this project?” in Step 2. If a name surfaces at the close that didn’t surface at discovery, KPI 4 broke two hours earlier. Handle the moment, then fix the question.

Scenario 16 — “My brother does this type of work”

KPIS 4, 16 · STEPS 2 → 10 · SURFACE IT EARLY OR EAT IT LATE.

What it is. Family or a friend in the trade. If they still booked us with a roofer in the family, that fact is doing a lot of talking — something about the family option doesn’t work for them, and they may not say what out loud.

SURFACE IT IN STEP 2

“Have you had anyone else look at this — or is there anyone in the family who does this kind of work?” [Their answer now saves you from discovering it at the close.]

IF IT LANDS AT THE CLOSE ANYWAY

“Your brother does this?” [4-second silence.]

“Can I ask you something honestly? With a roofer in the family — what had you bring us out here today?” [Silence. The answer is the whole objection: he’s too busy, he’s two states away, the last job dragged, they don’t want money between family.]

Then the honest frame — family will always beat us on price, and price isn’t what they called us for:

“Here’s the truth: your brother will beat my number. What he can’t give you is what makes the number worth it — a licensed and insured crew, a lifetime workmanship warranty, and a $30,000 third-party guarantee through Directorii. If something leaks in year six, you have a contract and a company. With family, you have an awkward Thanksgiving. Which one sounds like the peace of mind you told me you wanted?”

COACHING FLAG

The card’s line — “you really didn’t think I could do it cheaper than family, did you?” — is cut. It’s sarcasm aimed at the customer’s own family, and it concedes price with a smirk instead of reframing it with respect. Concede the price plainly; win on accountability.

Scenario 17 — “I need to talk to my son / daughter”

KPIS 4, 16, 18 · AN OLDER HOMEOWNER DEFERRING TO ADULT CHILDREN. HANDLE WITH CARE — THIS ONE IS DIFFERENT.

What it is. The card is right that this is different from other third-party objections. It is wrong about what to do with it. An older homeowner who wants their kids in the loop is not an obstacle to route around — and a signature obtained by isolating them from family is a cancel, a complaint, and exactly the kind of story that ends up in a BBB review with our name on it. In Colorado, pressure-closing seniors around their family is also a legal exposure, not just a reputation one.

The rule: never talk an older customer out of the family conversation. Invite the family in instead. The kids who feel bypassed kill deals from the driveway; the kids who feel included become the second referral source.

THE FLOW

"Talk to your son?" [4 seconds.] "Good — that's exactly what I'd want my parents to do."

"Can we make that conversation easy? Two ways I can help: we get him on the phone right now and I'll walk him through everything I showed you and answer his questions directly — or I come back when he can be here and we go through it together. Which works better for your family?"

Give them a framework for the conversation either way — three questions, offered as help, not as a trap:

"Whatever you two decide, these are the three things worth deciding on: Does this actually solve the problem? Do you trust the company doing it? And does the number work? If the answer to all three is yes, everything else is detail."

If they close today without the call, Step 12 exists for exactly this household: the Cool Down confirms commitment and surfaces any reason they might reverse — including "my daughter is going to ask why I didn't call her." Better to hear it at the table than in a cancellation email.

COACHING FLAG

Rejected from the card: closing first and asking "what will your son say?" after the check is signed, and treating the children's follow-up calls as a nuisance to be braced for. If the son calls, that call is a second sales presentation — take it gladly, walk him through the scope, and you've turned the deal-killer into a witness.

Scenario 18 — "I need to talk to my dad / uncle / neighbor"

KPI 16 · TYPICALLY A YOUNGER, FIRST-TIME BUYER BORROWING CONFIDENCE. ROUTE BACK TO MONEY.

What it is. A first home-improvement purchase, and they want a trusted voice to confirm they're not being taken. The advisor is usually a stand-in for one of two things: they see the advisor as the expert instead of you, or the advisor is a polite exit from a money conversation.

THE FLOW

"Run it by your dad?" [4 seconds.] "Smart — a second set of eyes never hurts on a first project like this."

"Can we get him on the phone while I'm here? He's going to have questions, and I'd rather he ask me than ask you to guess." [If yes — treat it like the spouse call: walk him through scope, warranty, guarantee.]

If he's unreachable, separate the advisor from the decision:

"No problem. Set your dad aside for one second — just you. The roof, the company, the number we landed on: how do

Their honest answer sorts it. "It's a lot of money" — you're back in the money diagnosis, Scenarios 13–14, and the dad was never the objection. "I just want his eyes on it" — arm the advisor: offer to send the full scope and photos, and set the follow-up call for after they've talked. A confident advisor with real documents closes this deal for you.

Scenario 19 — “No, it’s just the total amount”

KPI 16 · STEP 10 · A VALUE GAP WITH A NUMBER ON IT. BRIDGE IT — NEVER DISCOUNT IT.

What it is. They’ve isolated past monthly and down payment — the total itself doesn’t compute against what they expected. The play is to find their anchor, measure the real gap, and bridge the remainder with structure. The total price does not move.

THE FLOW

“The total?” [4 seconds.] “Okay — honest question. Before I came out today, what did you have in your head for this project?” [Get the number.]

“And after everything we walked through — the Class 4 shingle, the decking, the lifetime workmanship, the guarantee — where are you now?” [The number moves up. It almost always does.]

“So we’re really talking about a [gap] difference, not the whole number. If we can make that difference painless — spread it through the monthly instead of touching your savings — is there anything else between us?”

Bridge the remainder through GoodLeap. Re-anchor with Cost vs. Value if the starting number was years out of date — a 2019 expectation meeting a 2026 market is the most common source of this objection, and the 64% number is real, published, and honest.

COACHING FLAG

If their number doesn’t move after the value recap, the gap isn’t the total — it’s belief. Do not bridge a belief gap with financing. Go back to the discovery answers and cinch the knot; a customer financing something they don’t believe in is a cancellation on a payment plan.

Scenario 20 — “This is just more than we can afford right now”

KPIS 16, 17 · STEPS 10–11 · ISOLATE THE STRUCTURE. THE TOTAL NEVER MOVES AT THE TABLE.

What it is. Affordability, final form. The card’s core mechanic is right: monthly and down payment are adjustable without touching the total price, so find out which one is actually pinching before anything else.

THE FLOW

“More than you can afford right now?” [4 seconds.]

“Okay — is it the monthly payment or the down payment that’s doing it?” [They pick one. That pick is the whole conversation.]

- Down payment → GoodLeap structures with nothing out of pocket — Scenario 12. The total doesn’t change; the entry does.
- Monthly → their number, conditional commitment, then the manager call — Scenario 13. Step 11, exactly as written.
- “It’s the whole thing” → that’s the total-price objection wearing an affordability coat. Route to Scenario 19; if the gap survives the value recap and the T.O. chain, rescope through GBB — Scenario 14.

COACHING FLAG

The card's "Marketing Agreement" is a Top Rep mechanism we don't run. Our only pricing-relief architecture is the Colorado Roof Relief Program, and it moves through the manager on the T.O. call — never through the rep, never invented at the table.

Rejected framing from the card: "if you make it easy enough for them, they will buy anything." That sentence describes a customer as a mark. Making it easy to say yes to something they need is service; making it easy to buy "anything" is the mindset that generates cancels, complaints, and the exact reputation the trust model exists to beat.

Drill Schedule

Drill 1 — Mirror discipline (all objection scenarios). Partner throws objections cold from Scenarios 1–6 and 11–15. Rep must respond with mirror + 4-second silence before any other words. 3 sets of 8 reps. Pass: zero instances of talking inside the 4 seconds, zero pitch-rise on the objection landing.

Drill 2 — Diagnosis speed (Scenarios 1, 6, 13, 14). Partner gives a money-flavored stall, then answers the clarifying question with a randomized underlying cause. Rep names the category (value / affordability / timing / comparison / structure) and routes to the correct play. 2 sets of 8 reps. Pass: 7 of 8 routed correctly with no-oriented phrasing intact.

Drill 3 — Parachute delivery (Scenario 3). Full stone-wall roleplay to a booked review appointment. 5 reps. Pass: pact called out with accusation audit, exit-sell line delivered only inside the parachute, date and time locked before the roleplay ends.

Drill 4 — Silence endurance (Scenarios 10 & 11). Partner presents the spouse-look scenario or names a cheaper competitor, then goes quiet for up to 60 seconds. Rep holds silence or asks only "why?" / "what else?" 2 sets of 5 reps. Pass: no value points volunteered, no discount language, silence held until the partner breaks it.

Drill 5 — One-legger protocol (Scenario 9). Roleplay arrival with one homeowner missing, including the "I'll just fill them in" pushback. 3 reps. Pass: full inspection offered, zero pricing presented, return visit with both homeowners locked with day and time before exit.

Drill 6 — Outside-voice diagnosis (Scenarios 16–18). Partner plays brother-in-the-trade, elderly parent deferring to kids, or first-time buyer citing dad — randomized. Rep must identify which advisor type it is and run the matching play. 2 sets of 6 reps. Pass: elderly scenario always ends in a family invitation (never a workaround), trade-family scenario concedes price and wins on accountability, first-timer scenario routes to the ownership question.
